

Learning to operate equipment was as much a part of academic life for Jim Nichols as studying.

Special events, gave P. Everman a chance to sample cafeteria fare.

Creative students

A 1969-1970 North Putnam student was a creative but sometimes an unfathomable animal.

He made toothpick sculptures.

He wore ink tattoos on his hands.

Writing about mental telepathy, he was a fledgling author.

He conjugated verbs in Spanish, Latin, and, occasionally, even in English.

Sarah Bernhardt had nothing over the dramatics of a speech student in Room 134.

He practiced for solo contests in the broom closets.

"The room is more pleasant since you are here," said Bob Hedge to Mike White?
