

Home Economics class was a happy time but the girls still worked seriously and diligently on getting their projects done on time.

Mrs. B. Steward

Mrs. J. McGuaghey

Debbie Disney looked happy as she did the job of ironing in her daily Home Ec. class.

Galloping gourmets

Home economics gave consideration to the social and cultural conditions and needs of the students, encouragement for professional leadership, and contributed to the employability of youth and adults--the dual role of homemaker and wage earner.

Units were taught in managing personal food intake and food preparation.

Managing family resources for personal appearance, clothing needs and clothing construction, selection, and care.

A topic was managing family resources in selecting and caring for a functional home.

How to manage personal and family resources for family health and home nursing was emphasized.

Management and consumer education as related to family finances and purchasing power, and financial security were other topics of discussion. Resource people were from Public Service, Purdue University, and the Powers Studio.
