

Mrs. Bee was our school nurse.

The principal's office was especially busy on the day that the teachers got paid.

The bus drivers were J. Tillotson, W. Albin, S. Chilcote, W. Hubble, C. McGaughey, R. Loft, E. Lucas,

R. Cox, E. Earley, P. Grider, J. Wright, R. Ader, and G. O'Hair.

The silent minority

Janitors, cooks, and secretaries, --better named the minor faculty--were those few people who seem so unimportant and obscure in everyday school life. They were seen in the halls pushing a cart, in the kitchen mixing up a dinner brew, or in an office typing, so these people were taken for granted.

Without janitors, what would the halls have looked like? And what about the cooks? Who would have wanted milk and crackers for lunch?

Don't forget the secretaries. Who liked to see the principal to get a pass into class because he talked too long to his favorite friend?

What could we have done without Mrs. Bee's helpful medical aid?

Even though we may not have realized it, every member of the staff played a vital part in the life of NPHS by cleaning our school, cooking our meals, and keeping us well.

N.P.'s "handy men" were (l. to r.): Mr. Osborne, Mr. Burdine, and Mr. Raymond. Mr. Ragsdale is not shown.
