

As a part of daily classroom work, Mr. Gjesvold directed the junior high band in one of their many songs. Squeaks, drill and patience were the ingredients of a first year band. The junior high band performed at Christmas.

While the junior high band performed, Mr. Wilson decided to sit down and rest awhile.

Seventy-six trombones . . .

In the fall of the year, the North Putnam Marching Band could be seen in rehearsal in an open field near the school.

Passersby caught glimpses of formations being prepared for the following Friday's football fete or Crawfordsville's November Christmas parade.

The extra practicing paid off in first place medals for band members during solo and ensemble contests.

No matter how disheartening life may have seemed at times when the trumpet section was a little "off" or routines were anything but routines, the band always managed to perform most effectively when show time came.
