The Sines of Thetas

The first year of The Sines of Thetas (North Putnam's Math Club) was primarily organized to "get things on the move."

A program committee was established. Its main function was to list any interesting field trips and to designate a time when the club would be able to participate. These included teaching the techniques of the slide rule to the underclassmen and talking with an insurance representative, who is constantly surrounded with ratios and other mathematical equations.

Under the guidance of Mr. James Myers, the club attempted to "present material not ordinarily possible in regular class, provide motivation and interest in mathematics, and present an opportunity for members to increase their knowledge of mathematics through field trips."

Homeroom for the seniors included being measured for caps and gowns, and exchanging pictures.
