Being editor of the yearbook wasn't all fun and games as you can tell by the expression on Diane Evens' face.

Deadline again!

Trying to capture the highlights of typical school life and edit them in a yearbook was not, despite the layman's attitude, an easy task. It involved total commitment to the "cause", brains that worked overtime, hours of typing, proof-reading, headaches, and nightmares when deadline date was approaching.

Searching for the just right picture and caption, staff members were seen roaming the halls with a camera or pencil and paper in hand.

And if you happened by Room 150, behind the stacks of layouts and pictures, a dedicated editor was seen mourning the loss of his energy.

The end result of this venture was a small book celebrating the rise and fall of North Putnam's first year.
