

1971 was a year of progress.

The year 1971 brought many changes to North Putnam. It was not the first year at a new school. It was the second year--a year of change, of progress.

The student council spent half of the school year preparing a modified dress code to be presented to the school board for its approval or disapproval. The modified dress code stressed pant suit apparel for girls and certain changes for boys' hair styles.

"Blue Jean and Tennis Shoe" day allowed the girls to wear slacks or blue jeans for a school day.

The school year saw accident-prone pupils on crutches, in casts, and in all sorts of braces. Sometimes the building looked more like a hospital ward than a school.

North Putnam witnessed its first homecoming this year. Sherri Stoker became the first homecoming queen.

Two new clubs were organized this year--the Future Teachers' Association and the Industrial Arts Club.

A boys' pep block was organized to help support our team. Colorful tops added to the spirit of the girl's pep block.

A shuttle bus was considered for returning students home after extracurricular activities in the evening.

1970-71 saw the loss of community rivalry in school, more communication between the student body and the faculty and administration, and a "settled-in" feeling at North Putnam.

Art students decorated windows.

The bookmobile librarian checked out many interesting books to NP students this year.
