

Activities got the students involved.

Many extracurricular activities created interest for students outside of their academic requirements.

School spirit was spurred on by colorful posters and drawings done by the cheerleaders and members of the pep club.

Lights burned both early and late at North Putnam. With so many basketball teams some teams had to practice before school started in the mornings. Students rehearsing for the fall and spring plays returned to school in the evenings to practice songs, dances, or lines.

Recreational swimming was open to classes and clubs during the evening. Splash time provided work as well as relaxation for the members of North Putnam's first swim team.

North Putnam really got into the "swim" of things this year as clubs visited art and science museums, the state legislature, and took other interesting field trips.
