

Steve Goff and Joyce Hill danced the evening away.

Cinderella danced at the Christmas Ball.

Every couple at the Christmas Ball was Cinderella and Prince Charming in a make-believe world of glitter and tinsel decorations.

Indeed, royalty was present at the 1970 Christmas Ball as Chris Stoker wore the crown of queen and Greg Richard was king.

Christmas Ball has seemed to have become a traditional event at which girls look their most glamorous in formal gowns and special hair styles.

The jitterbug, the twist, and the hully-gully may have gone "out," but the tradition of stepping on your partner's toes was still "in" at the Christmas dance.

Since the couples were in formal attire, the dancing seemed to be at a slower pace. Couples who had never danced to anything but hard rock found themselves fascinated with the antiquated custom of dancing close to each other.

The 1970 Christmas Ball at North Putnam added a touch of magic to the already exciting Christmas season.

David Webber enjoyed the idea of crowning the 1970 queen of the Christmas Ball, Chris Stoker.
