

Timed typing tests sharpened competitiveness in business classes at North Putnam.

Mrs. Hutchins

Mr. Gibson

Mrs. Elles

Business didn't Mickey Mouse around.

Companies expanded and developed in Mr. Gibson's business class as students actually imagined themselves as owners of companies and made executive decisions.

A representative from Porter Business College came to talk with the girls about the Nancy Taylor modeling part of their program.

Typewriter keys clicked, stencils were mimeographed, and filing techniques were learned as part of many business skills needed for secretarial work as well as personal use. Students learned by doing in business.
