BAND

Still Makes State...

On a chilly October 29th, Jennifer Moore found herself in the midst of a busload of high school marching band students preparing for a great occasion.

"It was total chaos, forty people on a bus throwing clothes everywhere and donning a uniform made of stiff material. It was almost as if these people were shedding, along with their street clothes, their street attitude, and, putting on their uniforms, a sense of superiority, pride, and professionalism," commented Jennifer on the State Marching Band Finals.

Although all the members played their hearts out, the band only came away with 6th place.

As always, spirits were high, even after the marching band results were announced. They felt that they had gotten jipped, but, more importantly, they played to their best abilities. In the band members' minds, they had come out on top. By Crystal Mudgett

Kim Payne plays her heart out to impress the judges.

Joe Martin leads the saxophone section through a final practice before the band boarded the buses to the Hoosier Dome.

Mr. Pradkey, Mrs. Dory, and Mr. Wilson like the way the band finished its song.
