

MAKING IT HAPPEN

By: Stephanie Stevens

On Prom night when people walked into the gymnasium they no longer saw bleachers, basketball goals, or anything resembling a gym. Instead, they saw hundreds of twinkling lights, multi-colored crepe paper covering the entire ceiling, balloons, and palm trees wherever they looked. However, it was not an easy task to turn a basketball gym into an "island paradise." It took the efforts of students, faculty and staff, and parents. Sometimes workers stayed up past midnight even on school nights.

"The decorations were good, because the people worked hard and worked cooperatively," replied Anthony Richie.

"More stuff could have been done better than it was," remarked Jill Evens.

"For a class that didn't have much money, we made due with what we had and pulled off a great prom," commented junior Andy Perkins.

Jennifer Chestnut and Connie Lambermont get ready to cut different colored ribbons for the balloons. Juniors, as well as some parents, helped decorate for the prom.

Janielle Malicoat puts the finishing touches on her drawing. She was one of many parents who put in long hours decorating for the post prom.
